Boldemans Soaps, Rockhampton

Once on the outskirts of Rockhampton, this soap factory on Upper Dawson Road has been within a residential district for many decades. The buildings seem to be still in use in 2008, although likely not for manufacturing soap.

The images below were made as panoramas from multiple photos, thus lines (such as the garage-type door) are not always parallel. However both have been kept to the same relative scale and the site does slope down to the right.

The factory is obviously too large to model in its entirety, but each structure has some features that are worth modelling.

The variety of roof structures, window and door types, wall coverings, ventilators, loading hoist, etc., are typical of industrial and commercial structures up until the 1950s.

Furthest back on the left hand side is even a less-weathered metal-sheathed extension that was added much later.

Today such structures would likely be metal frame and colourbond sheeting, rather than timber frame with galvanised sheeting.
